

Gosar leaves lasting Impression

Dear Editor,

Below you will find a copy of the fundraising publication Paul Gosar distributed to me and other former supports this past December 30th, 2011. Within the text he expresses a fear the media may portray "Support for Congressman Gosar is Weak.", and states, "That would be devastating to our campaign and our momentum for victory next year." He makes these statements all while asking my family for more campaign money to fight Ann Kirkpatrick. Congressman Gosar's cowardly choice to run for a safer republican seat, where he doesn't even live, should be more concerning than not having enough campaign money. Paul Gosar intentionally misled his supporters, while planning all along to abandon them. Making false statements about being singled out by democrats and begging supporters to help him defeat Kirkpatrick, all while he secretly organized his retreat plan. I want Dr. Gosar to know, "We realize now you can't be trusted and you lied to your own supporters. What does it tell those who backed you and who have worked so hard casting you in a positive light, when you don't even trust them to elect you to Congress? Do you really think you stand a better chance with people who don't know you? First impressions are everything! I hope the people in the river district see you in a more truthful light now... as dark as it may be."

This is my last ask for support as 2011 comes to a close. There's nothing I hate more than asking for money but I know that if we don't reach our fundraising goal by December 31st, the opposition is going to be even more energized than they already are.

Political fundraising is a curious thing. You really have to show you have a strong cash-on-hand figure and a lot of supporters on your side if you want to achieve momentum going into the election year.

What I really want to avoid is a bad media story that basically says, "Support for Congressman Gosar is Weak." That would be devastating to our campaign and our momentum for victory next year.

Can you take just a minute and help the campaign? I'm not asking you for a million dollars even though my opponent is well on her way to raising that much to defeat me. Rather, I'm only asking for whatever you can afford today. Every dollar raised right now will send a strong signal to the mainstream media and our political opponents that we intend to fight for our values and keep this seat in Republican hands.

Even a contribution of \$100, \$50, \$35 or \$25 is an enormous help right now. We're so close to reaching our fundraising goal and even closer to our goal to get 500 new donors over the final week of the quarter.

Please send your support today.

Maude and I wish you and yours all the very best in 2012. We look forward to celebrating victory with you next November, but we have a long road ahead of us.

With thanks,

Paul

P.S. One more thing: After you contribute, please forward this email to four or five of your friends or neighbors who share our values of a limited government and getting our economy back on track. Again, from the bottom of my heart, thank you!
